6. Three months grace period for SOLAS enforcement

The International Maritime Organisation (IMO) Committee agreed that Administrations and port State control authorities should adopt a practical and pragmatic approach when verifying compliance with the requirements of SOLAS regulations, for a period of three months after 1 July 2016, with a view to:

1. Permitting packed containers that are loaded on a ship before 1 July 2016 and are transhipped on or after 1 July 2016 to be shipped to their final port of discharge without the VGM specified in SOLAS regulations
2. Providing flexibility to all the stakeholders in containerised transport to refine, if necessary procedures for documenting, communicating and sharing VGM information.

The measures are in the context of the Comprehensive Strategic Partnership (CSP) work underway between the two sides, which also involves steps to boost defence cooperation. The European Commission has confirmed plans to submit a proposal to the European Council in June for signing the 28-nation trade deal with Canada, amid continued questions over the pact's potential fate in the ratification stages.

12. Africa - Approaching the CFTA services negotiations: Which way towards delivery by 2017?

The CFTA negotiations, which were launched in June 2015, will be conducted in two phases. While the first phase covers trade in goods and services, the second phase will focus on investment, intellectual property rights, and competition policy.

Since the launch of the negotiations, the AU Commission (AUC) has been undertaking capacity building seminars to enhance the knowledge and negotiating skills on trade in services among policy-makers, negotiators, and private sector representatives. From these seminars, a general consensus seemed to emerge around the idea that market access and national treatment commitments should be complemented by sectoral regulatory disciplines in order to promote trade competition.

13. Africa - SMEs in the services sector: New drivers of growth in Africa's LDCs?

As conversations about the importance of services to countries' (and especially poor countries') economies resonate throughout the world, the issue of SMEs (small and medium-sized enterprises) and their contribution to the services sector is often raised. Yet the scope and impact of SME-driven services in LDCs have received scant attention in formal academic literature.

Information on SMEs in the services sector in Africa is particularly patchy. However, what is evident from many policy documents, broad economic analyses, business reports, and opinion pieces is that SMEs in the African LDCs face significant hurdles when attempting to develop and market their service offerings, which can be a source of acute frustration and disillusionment, and make the prospect of business success a distant dream.
